For 18 Years Reprint from Enterprise Ledger James Oscar English migrated to Troy during the Elba flood of 1929. When he came back, he found two drowned mules and three cows in his store and a business that was 'all washed up.' Most of the furnishings in his home were ruined also, but an unusual thing happened. When the English's had left for Troy, just ahead of the flood, Mrs. English had set the table for the noon meal. While they were gone, the water had raised the table almost to the ceiling but when it came down, it was still perfectly set with butter milk still in the glasses. So March of 1929 found Mr English no longer in the mercantile business and for a new livlihood he turned to selling those sleek new Fords which
